Part II: Research, Teaching, and Clinical Contributions

Research, Teaching, and Clinical Contributions.

OVERVIEW

Dr. Millett is a surgeon and partner with the Steadman Clinic. In 2005, Dr. Millett was recruited to the Steadman Clinic as a specialist in shoulder surgery and sports medicine. Dr. Millett specializes in disorders of the shoulder, knee, and elbow. He treats patients with rotator cuff tears, ligament and cartilage injuries, and arthritis, and brings expertise in total shoulder replacement surgery, arthroscopy, and the treatment of shoulder fractures. A particular interest of Dr. Millett's is advanced, arthroscopic surgery where minimally invasive techniques are used to restore damaged ligaments, joints, and bones.

Dr. Millett's clinical practice is based Vail, Colorado where he sees approximately 75 patients in the clinical setting and performs approximately 20 surgical shoulder, knee and elbow Surgeries weekly.

RESEARCH

Dr. Millett is recognized for many innovative shoulder techniques and their scientific validation through clinical and basic science work. This includes double row rotator cuff repair, joint preserving treatments for OA of the shoulder, arthroscopic treatment for snapping scapula syndrome, instability procedures, and new techniques shoulder replacement.

He has ongoing biomechanical studies on the kinematics and loading of the shoulder after various procedures such as joint preserving surgery for shoulder osteoarthritis, shoulder arthroplasty, and rotator cuff repair. Using sophisticated computer modeling and dual plane fluoroscopic in vivo analysis, Dr. Millett and his team of researchers have ongoing studies on the effects of muscle transfers in the shoulder using computer models to simulate the transfers and the resultant motions and forces. Furthermore, through Dr. Millett's dual fluoroscopy research program, they have been able to measure in vivo loading and kinematics after various shoulder procedures.

Ongoing research projects include (1) the correlation of MR and arthroscopy for chondral injuries, (2) a randomized controlled trial of arthroscopic rotator cuff repair, (3) the MRI study of arthroscopic rotator cuff repair and arthroscopic shoulder stabilization, (4) the use of 3rd generation, anatomical, prostheses in shoulder arthroplasty, and (5) biomechanical testing of novel arthroscopic rotator cuff and other shoulder repair techniques. Previously, he was involved with proteomics research to study cytokines profiles in osteoarthritis. Dr. Millett started the Harvard Center for Musculoskeletal Proteomics Research, a multidisciplinary group of researchers with interest in using proteomics to study musculoskeletal disease. He served as Director of this collaborative effort with the Harvard Partners Genomics Center in Cambridge. He is now on the scientific advisory board of the Steadman Philippon Research Institute and several other for profit and not-for-profit entities in the orthopaedic, sports medicine and musculoskeletal areas.

Dr. Millett is collaborating with Dr. Charles Ho in the department of Radiology to study MR imaging of articular cartilage and tendons.

Dr. Millett is also recognized for his early work in joint replacement and the process of particle-induced loosening. He has also made contributions in the diagnosis, management and research of arthrofibrosis, the process by which joints become scarred and stiff.

TEACHING

Dr. Millett has hosted, organized or participated in numerous regional, national, and international educational programs on shoulder and sports medicine and has been invited as a faculty member for the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, the Arthroscopy Association of North America, The American Orthopaedic Society for Sports Medicine, the Dutch Orthopaedic Society, the Mexican Arthroscopy Association, the Argentine Orthopaedic Association, and the French Arthroscopy Society. He has performed live surgery in Bermuda, the Netherlands, China, and Germany. He was the program chair for the 2013 Open Meeting of the American Shoulder and Elbow Surgeons.

Dr. Millett oversees and instructs fellows, visiting scholars, researchers, and visiting orthopaedic residents in the clinics and operative suites. He directs the shoulder portion of the Steadman Clinic Sports Medicine Fellowship, training 6-7 fellows per annum. He started the international visiting scholar's program where orthopaedic surgeons from abroad come to work and perform research at the Steadman Philippon Research institute. He organizes a weekly didactic teaching session on shoulder disorders for fellows, rehab specialists and trainers. He has mentored visiting medical students and residents from Dartmouth, Harvard, University of Michigan, Northwestern University, the University of Illinois, and other programs.

Dr. Millett has supervised the medical school dissertation of several medical students including one from the University of Heidelberg in Germany and another from Hamburg, Germany. Since moving to Vail, he has also developed educational DVD's for patients and therapists on shoulder arthroplasty and advanced strategies for shoulder rehabilitation. Dr. Millett continually gives lectures to primary care physicians both within and outside the Steadman Clinic.

Dr Millett started the visiting research scholar's program at the Steadman Philippon Research Institute and now this program is endorsed by AGA – the German Arthroscopy Association. He has trained research scholars from Germany (3), France, and Holland and has scholars from Mexico and Germany at the moment.

In Boston, Dr. Millett helped formulate the Brigham and Women's musculoskeletal guidelines for treating physicians, developing algorithms on the evaluation and treatment of shoulder pain. Dr. Millett had served as an instructor at the Harvard Orthopaedic Residents' arthroscopy courses. He organized and co-moderate the combined Orthopaedic Surgery / Radiology Shoulder conference at Brigham & Women's Hospital, and participated in the weekly Sports medicine and Shoulder conference at Massachusetts General Hospital. Dr. Millett has lectured at the Harvard Orthopaedic Residents' Core Curriculum, the Harvard medical students' physical diagnosis course, and the Harvard Medical School surgical anatomy course. He also participated in the Partners Summer Internship program serving as the preceptor for undergraduate and graduate students interested in pursuing careers in medicine or orthopaedics. Finally, Dr. Millett was involved in the community education programs at BWH and lecture on sports and shoulder injuries.

Presently Dr. Millett organizes and moderates the fellows' core curriculum on shoulder surgery with weekly lectures and frequent laboratory and hands-on surgical bioskills sessions. He also participates regularly in the weekly sports medicine core curriculum program at the Steadman Clinic.

Dr. Millett is actively involved in many societies and lecture throughout the world on various shoulder and sports medicine topics. Locally he participates in many educational programs for local physicians, athletic trainers, and physical therapists.

3. Description of teaching award(s) received

Intern of the Year Award (1996) – selected by peers from department of surgery, North Shore University Hospital, Cornell University Medical Center.

Achievement Award – American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons (2010, 2011, 2012) - in part for educational contributions and volunteerism in the field

E. Report of Clinical Activities

1. Description of clinical practice:

Dr. Millett's clinical practice is focused on the management of problems of the shoulder, knee, and elbow. He was recruited specifically to enhance and develop the shoulder service at the Steadman Clinic. Dr. Millett also cares for patients with traumatic injuries, elbow problems and sports-related knee injuries. Dr. Millett has an academically-focused, private practice based at the Steadman Clinic in Vail, CO.

2. Patient load:

Dr. Millett's typical week includes 2 clinical days and 3 to 4 operative days. In addition, Dr. Millett's practice involves direct supervision and teaching of students and fellows.

The level of complexity varies but Dr. Millett frequently sees patients with failed surgeries and complex disorders, due to the tertiary nature of his practice and due to his focus on a subspecialty area of orthopaedic surgery. Patients are frequently referred from other orthopaedic surgeons regionally, nationally, and internationally.

The average number of patients evaluated is approximately 50 to 75 per week. His practice encompasses all types of shoulder problems, including complex revision problems after failed surgery. The Shoulder Service at the Steadman Clinic not only serves as a regional referral center but also serves as a national and international referral center for patients with difficult shoulder problems. Dr. Millett's annual surgical volume has exceeded 700 Shoulder and Elbow Surgeons for the last several years.

3. Clinical contributions.

Arthroscopic Rotator Cuff Repair

Dr. Millett has a keen interest in minimally invasive techniques to repair the rotator cuff and has completed clinical and biomechanical studies of novel surgical techniques that address many of the limitations of previous cuff-repair methods. One technique, called a mattress-double-anchor technique, recreates the rotator cuff footprint in a broad and strong fashion to enhance healing. This was among the first published techniques for bridging interconnected double row repairs that has now become one of the most popular technical methods for performing rotator cuff repair. Dr. Millett has also been actively investigating and studying the arthroscopic neuroanatomy of the shoulder.

Lesser Tuberosity Osteotomy

With Dr. Millett's high volume of shoulder arthroplasty in Boston he became extremely interested in improving surgical technique and studying the clinical outcomes. With his fellow Dr. Brent Ponce and in collaboration with Dr Gus Mazzocca and JP Warner, Dr. Millett spearheaded a clinical and biomechanical study of a novel technique to repair the subscapularis, an important rotator cuff muscle that is detached during the procedure. The new technique for removing and repairing the tendon is stronger than traditional methods of repair and decreased the risk of postoperative subscapularis rupture and dysfunction by 6-fold.

This was awarded the best scientific exhibit at the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons.

Comprehensive Arthroscopic Management (CAM) for Glenohumeral Osteoarthritis

The CAM procedure has been developed as a method for joint preservation surgery in young or active patients with GHOA. The procedure involves an arthroscopic extensive debridement, capsular release, humeral osteoplasty with goat's beard osteophyte excision, and an axillary nerve neurolysis. The technique is being validated both anatomically and with clinical outcomes through the Steadman Philippon research institute.

Surgical Treatment of Arthrofibrosis

Dr. Millett has an interest in arthrofibrosis, abnormal scarring of joints, and has written several articles about the classification and treatment of this disorder. He has completed a two-part peer reviewed series on the topic of arthrofibrosis of the knee in AMERICAN JOURNAL OF SPORTS MEDICINE. He has contributed other original papers on the technique and outcomes for both open and arthroscopic treatment of this disorder in the knee and shoulder. With Dr. Steadman, Dr. Millett completed a comprehensive instructional video that is available through the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons detailing the surgical treatment of arthrofibrotic knees. Several papers focusing on the treatment and rehabilitation of this problem have been published in peer-reviewed journals.

Particle-induced osteolysis

Dr. Millett has had a long history of interest in total joint replacement and in particle-induced osteolysis, the leading cause for loosening of implants. His basic science work on these topics has been funded at the national level, has won awards at the local and national level, and has been published in the peer-reviewed literature, including JOURNAL OF BONE AND JOINT SURGERY. One of the key studies presented a novel pharmacologic approach to the inhibition and prevention of bone loss around implants utilizing a small animal model that Dr. Millett helped develop. This approach and this model are being used by other researchers in the field.
